7.3 North America

In North America markets, business owners have become more cautious in their views on potential scenarios for COVID-19 recovery. One thing that will certainly improve expectations in every country is news of a safe and broadly available vaccine. In North America, the United States is most affected by the epidemic. The U.S. has crossed more than 6 million cases and Canada has witnessed a total 1.2 million cases. In North America, the United States is most affected by the epidemic.

U.S. PMI increased to 53.6 in August from 50.9 in July. It is observed that the reopening of clients and resumption of business has driven the new orders and propelled the business growth. Many firms recorded the first rise in foreign client demand since December 2019. However, the rate of input cost is rising since the start of January 2019. Manufacturers have passed these costs to their customers by an increase in terms of pricing

Canada Manufacturing PMI increased to 52.9 in July 2020 from 47.8 in June. Output has risen at the fastest rate and new orders have risen for the first time since February in the midst of a sales rebound as consumers returned to work and transactions have resumed. Jobs first increased in five months though export revenues continued to decline as demand remained low overseas. On the market front, higher transport and raw materials costs and evidence of supplier surcharges related to COVID-19 raised input prices while output price inflation slowed slightly. Finally, manufacturers remained positive, with expectations still moderated after June due to the possibility of a second wave of infections, in the midst of worries about the global economic outlook.
